BLUES IN THE MEADOW

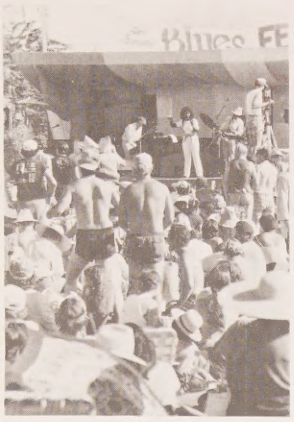

Photo: Janice Tong

The San Francisco Blues Festival will be held once again in the splendid outdoor setting of the Great Meadow at Fort Mason. Overlooking the Golden Gate Bridge and the San Francisco Bay, with a sweeping view of the hills of the City, the 16th Annual SF Blues Festival hosts two afternoons of great blues from California, Chicago, Memphis, Texas and Louisiana.

Long considered one of the major blues events in the country, the SFBF is the longest ongoing blues festival in the United States. Begun as a tribute to Bay Area blues traditions, the SFBF now includes musicians from many regions and styles: from down-home country blues to the tough ensemble city blues of Chicago; the Louisiana traditions of cajun and zydeco; the famous guitar blues styles of Texas; and all of the mixtures that make up the blues in California today.

This year's Festival offers a lineup of musicians that includes the return of modern blues guitar master Albert Collins and the Ice Breakers, the first SFBF appearance of ballad blues giant Bobby "Blue" Bland, and Mississippi blues legend John Lee Hooker, performing solo in the tradition of his early Detroit recordings. Chicago blues will be represented by Koko Taylor, "Queen of the Blues," and the sound of slide guitarist Lil Ed and the Blues Imperials.

Memphis-style R&B is presented by "Soul Queen" Carla Thomas in a rare West Coast appearance, backed by Bay Area favorites Mark Naftalin and the Blue Monday Band. Zydeco remains a tradition at the SFBF, this year performed by C. J. Chenier and his Red Hot Louisiana Band. There will be a special gospel show on Sunday morning with the dynamic Emmit Powell and the Gospel Elites.

Special features this year include 72-year-old blues guitar discovery Chester D., making his first major appearance; Mike Henderson, with a history of the Delta blues; and an appearance by guitar great Elvin Bishop, joining Albert Collins for a super-jam.

The Festival takes place on September 10 and 11 from 11:30am to 6pm in the Great Meadow, Bay and Laguna Streets. Tickets are $11 in advance, $13 at the Festival; a special two-day advance ticket is $17. To order by phone, call 1-800-225-2277 or 415-762-BASS. For further information, call 826-6837.

COMMUNITY OUTREACH THEATER

The Performing Arts Workshop, a nonprofit organization that has served the Bay Area since 1965, is also one of Fort Mason Center's oldest resident groups, locating its headquarters here in 1980. In its twenty-three years of existence, P.A.W. has not only managed to survive, it is even expanding its community outreach programs in new directions.

P.A.W.'s primary goal is to provide education, training, and performing opportunities in theater and dance for children, youth and adults of all races and socioeconomic backgrounds, and at all levels of ability. The programs are based on the premise that they must reach those people in the community who don't have adequate access to established cultural resources.

Students perform at the Youth Festival in Golden Gate Park as part of the Artists-In-Schools program.

Much of the success of this organization can be attributed to the unflagging energy and dedication of Gloria Unti, founder and artistic director of P.A.W. Under her guidance, the Artists-In-Schools program is now operating in fifteen elementary, eight middle, and, for the first time, two high schools. During the 1988-89 school year, P.A.W. will provide performing arts classes for students who speak English as a second language, an increased number of classes for the hearing-impaired, and classes in vocal music. In addition to these weekly sessions, the professional artistic staff prepares the students for outside presentations and performances.

This year also marks the second year of P.A.W.'s Intern Program, led by Unti, in which artists are prepared to teach in the public school setting. The interns attend an intensive week of training, observe classes taught by master artists, attend monthly workshops and, under supervision, teach portions of the creative movement, dance and theater classes while being critiqued and evaluated. The two-semester program attempts to develop a new, highly-qualified generation of artist-teachers.

Another of P.A.W.'s most successful projects, Theater for the Elderly, is now in its fourth year. Having won fulsome praise for performances at Laguna Honda Hospital and the Mt. Zion Adult Day Care Program, the project will soon offer presentations to the residents of the Jewish Home for the Aged. A new program, Taking Time Out, was created this year to offer classes in stress relief to clients of AIDS and drug-prevention service organizations. The program improves the physical and mental well-being of the individuals and provides opportunities for participating in community events.

If you'd like more information about this exciting and diverse theater arts organization, or any of its programs, call Performing Arts Workshop at 673-2634.

SUN & MOON: TRADITIONAL ARTS OF KOREA

For nearly 300 years, following a series of disastrous invasions in the late 1500's, Korea's monarchs endeavored to seal the peninsula from any contact with outside cultures. During this long period of self-imposed isolation, the so-called "Hermit Kingdom," a well-ordered Neo-Confucian society founded on agricultural enterprise, quietly went its own way. Though influenced by China, Korea resolutely maintained her own identity, reflected in her unique language, cuisine, and expressive culture in music and the decorative arts.

During September and October, the San Francisco Craft & Folk Art Museum presents "Sun and Moon: Traditional Arts of Yi Dynasty Korea." This exhibition of some eighty objects, both ordinary and extraordinary, includes domestic furnishings, costume items, and rare religious articles associated with Korea's Buddhist, Confucian, and shaman traditions. Drawn from both public and private collections on the West Coast, these objects suggest the range and complexity of Korea's popular arts during the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries. They illustrate the distinctiveness of the Korean tradition compared with other East Asian traditions.

The concept of "folk" crafts is somewhat more difficult to apply in Korea than in either China or Japan. Aristocrat and commoner alike employed screen paintings and other appurtenances for weddings, birthday ceremonies, and similar auspicious occasions. Korean folk crafts represent a rich, symbol-laden art, combining prayers and wishes for the health and well-being of the family or the nation with great whimsy and charm.

Following Korea's opening to the outside world in 1882, a flood of inexpensive consumer goods invaded the marketplace. By the 1920's, items of domestic manufacture were not only gone, but were largely forgotten. This was followed by the country's transformation from a rural agrarian society to an industrial power, in combination with wrenching periods of colonial domination and civil war. These circumstances did not encourage the preservation of artifacts like women's knotwork and evil-repelling tiger paintings.

Today, however, Korean scholars have turned their attention to such indigenous traditions, one result being a proliferation of folk museums and folklife festivals. Even in such popular symbols as "Hodori," the tiger mascot of the 1988 Seoul Olympics, there is a resonance of an earlier and vibrant folk tradition.

The exhibition, funded in part by a grant from the National Endowment for the Arts, was organized by Dr. Robert Sayers, a staff member in the Department of Anthropology, California Academy of Sciences. He is the author of several articles and a monograph on the history of domestic ceramics production in Korea. A catalogue by Dr. Sayers will accompany the exhibition.

"Sun and Moon" will be open from September 3 through October 30, Tuesdays through Sundays, from noon to 5pm, admission $1. On Saturdays from 10am to noon, visitors may enter free of charge. On September 21, from 7 to 9pm, Dr. Sayers will present a lecture and slide show on the traditional arts of the Yi Dynasty. Admission is $3. For further information, call the Museum at 775-0990.
